

Dear FCC Commissioners & Staff:

My name is Rishi Gogate and I am writing to you regarding your reconsideration of the rules that require telephone companies to provide ISPs access to the public switched phone network. Removal of these requirements would be a grave mistake.

I use a local ISP and and this service is invaluable to me. The major cable and telephone companies are simply not competitive or customer friendly when it comes to ISP service. They offer limited options and I would be forced to buy extra services such as extra email mailboxes, web pages, and numerous advertising

Sincerely,

Rishi Gogate
